Western Hull Sacking, Inc. was established in 1980 by Ray and Virginia Walker to process cotton seed hulls to be sent to oil and gas drilling locations across the United States for use during loss circulation times. In 1990, the company redirected its efforts towards grinding and resizing cellophane film for use in loss circulation during drilling and cementing. In 2000, Western Poly was added to the product line.

Western Hull Sacking, Inc. is a family owned and operated business. Kent and Kristi Walker, Ray and Virginia's son and daughter-in-law, are now overseeing the operations of the company. Both have been with Western Hull Sacking, Inc. since 1994. Kent and Kristi are currently integrating their children, Kaisen and Kolt Walker, into the day to day operations of the company. The company has expanded to service the United States and Canada.

Our employees are trained in quality inspection of all products being produced so that our customers can be assured that each sack of product they receive is held to the highest standards.

Our goal is to provide exceptional service and high quality products. We strive to live and do business all to the glory of God. If we can assist/serve you in any way, please contact us.
